Description

The first study to provide a comprehensive, long-term analysis of Bulgaria's relationship with the European continent, with a strong focus on its impact on Bulgarian national identity.

'Among the now extensive literature on Bulgaria's European accession, this collection of essays, written by an international team of well established as well as young scholars, will shine with its careful social and political contextualization of the issues, its longue durée framework, and its genuine comparative effort.'

—Maria Todorova, Gutgsell Professor of History, The University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign

Bulgaria and Europe: Shifting Identities examines how Bulgarian historiography and literature over the centuries have created differing conceptions of Europe and, in the process, shaped the country's own shifting identity. It also provides the broader cultural context and historical perspective required in order to understand the country's EU accession process as well as its aftermath. This work ultimately addresses what has arguably been the key question facing Bulgaria in the post-Cold War period: 'Are we European?'

Readership: Academics and students concerned with modern and contemporary history, political science, international relations, European studies, anthropology, literature, gender studies, economics and studies of ethnicity and nationalism; policy makers and those working in the field of international or non-governmental organizations.
